

Seekers,

A discussion of what it means to seek for God in truth and some truths that will help you sort it all out.

The fundamental question is, are you truly a seeker? It makes very little sense to act like one if you not. What a waste of effort. Not a seeker, do yourself a favor and stop pretending. If you're not a seeker it won't change the fact that the God of all creation has a place reserved for you at his side. It won't change the fact He is willing to reach to you before you reach to Him. It doesn't change the fact He is ready when you are. It doesn't even matter as I discovered, if you're interested in the truth or feel it's a joke. God's funny like that, He desires you to understand the "what and the why" of it all.

Most of us come to this concept of God with a ton of junk in our heads; perceptions, expectations and preconceived concepts running around our heads, in our finite minds. I won't kid you. Trying to get your head around the reality of God is something you're gonna have to walk out and be involved with. The epiphany of his existence is the easy part. The getting your head around the reality of God part is a real treat in exploration. Enjoy the ride. If nothing else at least you will understand what us crazy Christians are talking about sometimes. After all, Christians can be, well . . . complicated. Some of us can be real pieces of work while we get to know God better.

Some of you may feel that religion is poison. You may see it as the very cause of everything that is wrong with what you perceive is the world. I suppose it's a matter of definitions. What is your definition of religion? You see I'm a Christian and I have a very precise definition of religion, the pure kind anyway and it is written in what we Christians understand is the living reference document about God, the bible. Relax; I don't need you to buy into that yet if you don't want to. I'm just telling you what my perspective is as a Christian, so you can begin to see what Christians mean when they use all those words you hear so much of but don't really understand "what the heck we are on about".

Anyway, myself as a Christian hold this specific definition of religion, the pure God's loving variety, as this; To visit the fatherless and widows in what they are going through and help them and to keep ourselves from getting nasty with the ugly bits of the world by staying close to Him and letting God keep us that way. How many wars has that started? The answer, ZERO.

So, ok you say what about all that fighting and all the denominations and all that junk about what God and what faith and what religion or why do Christians treat me like junk sometimes?

All of those are great questions. We will answer them as we progress but first remember this key; Christianity according to God is a very personal thing between you and Himself. What I believe and what my denomination or chosen faith is, has absolutely nothing to do with your relationship with God, none.

The fact that people have been screwing up God's pure religion isn't a new concept and it certainly isn't limited to "back in the old days" or for that matter the "days to come". In fact the very reason that we need to have that one on one relationship with God is because of how people screw up his intentions. Some do it on purpose, some because they haven't understood something, some because it gives them power, some because they are playing with it and really don't care anyway and finally some just because they can hurt folks.

So if you are truly a seeker here is the tricky bit; it's on you.

Funny enough, what I'm sharing with you here now is in that document I mentioned earlier. From a Christian perspective; Christians believe that God wants us to work out our relationship and eventual salvation with our God one on one. Each of us is accountable for our relationship with God, you alone are responsible for exactly as much God that you have and can stand.

Now having folks to talk to that share Christianity with you is fine, as the God I worship tells me that I should check out folks that say they share my faith and see if we can learn stuff together. God also says I shouldn't try to be a loner in this Christian faith. However; the responsibility of my relationship is on me.

So what do I mean by that?

You hopefully have decided you are a seeker by now. If that's true you are already doing what I am suggesting you should do. You found this document online and are reading it, hearing what another person who calls himself a Christian believes. The next step is the important part, after you hear me discuss or read this on the Christian faith and how I feel about the God I worship and adore, it's on you to see if what I have chosen to believe agrees with God or not. Remember, sometimes folks get it wrong. Most of the time they can get it wrong without meaning to and it's your personal relationship that matters not my relationship.

I can tell you that there is a source that you can turn to. A true place to see what the God you seek and the God I speak to you about here, thinks about on every topic imaginable; you think I'm going to say the bible right? Well that's a great place to start but right now I want to teach you about a special thing you have that can help you get through the sticky bits. It's called prayer.

Learning early that you can talk with God just as you would your friends that are right here with you is a great way to sort out the nonsense of noise from the true God you seek. At first you may feel that you have already prayed and no one was home or maybe He didn't answer or you feel stupid talking to something you haven't decided even exists or not. Not to mention your friends will bust your chops because you're talking to what they may feel is an imaginary friend. Hopefully, you have friends that already know the one true God and they can help you. If you don't have any friends that do then you may have to decide if you're really a seeker, because if you are a seeker you will need to talk to this God you seek even if it makes you unpopular.

Some folks make prayer a very elaborate process. Some feel they need special pieces of clothing or to be in special places or in certain physical positions. I have even met folks who feel they need to eat certain foods before they pray. Well, your mileage may vary as you get to know your God but my personal best prayers have always been me just talking with God in honesty. If we are seeking God, let's hope this God is big enough to tell when your full of junk or lying, not being honest; otherwise He really isn't worth following, if you follow what I mean?

Being honest about what your purpose is in this "God thing" and then being honest about your feelings and issues with Him doesn't bother God one bit. I have been at times in my life, very angry with God; an example was for a time I was angry that He just talked with all the folks in the churches that were already Christians but didn't say one word to me even when I was trying to figure out what God was. I found out later that I wasn't really a seeker at the time but just playing with the concept and as it would turn out He had a "baseball bat salvation" waiting for me.

I remember this lack of communication at that time made so angry that one day I hollered at Him until I got tired of yelling and went to sleep, angry. "Stupid God anyway" was my answer to the dilemma. That seems really funny to me now. At the time I wasn't amused. It seems that God didn't mind that honesty with Him as He chose to draw me to Him anyway, even after I suggested He was just a benevolent alien.

After I became a Christian, which happened to me in a way I could never deny its occurrence; I learned that being dishonest with God in your conversations with Him is really dumb, like God wouldn't know I was full of it. So honesty is very important. Be honest with yourself, with other people and with the God you are trying to check out. Once you decide to be honest what you need to do next is easy. Talk to Him. Yes it's just that simple. When He answers, and God will answer, be honest enough to at least acknowledge God did, even if the answer is not what you wanted to hear.

If you feel like there is "nobody home" when you talk with Him try to checking your honesty. First are you even willing to imagine He may actually answer? If you can't bring yourself to expect an answer maybe you should bring that up with God too, after all it's honest and as a Christian I know that God is truth among many other things.

So if the issue is you can't bring yourself to talk with God freely, ask yourself honestly are you really a seeker or do you just want to act like one for another agenda. In the event it's a real wannabe situation tell God that too and if you want more, tell God that. If the issue is you can't bring yourself to believe God is even going to hear you but you are a seeker in honesty, tell God that. If the issue is you can't hear his answers, you got it – Tell God that.

What do you have to lose? If it's junk then all you will have lost is a few ounces of air. If you really are a seeker of God then this isn't a game and you are willing to do things that move you in the direction of God and one of these steps is learning how easy God is to talk to and what that can help you with, as you get to know Him. At some point in your seeking it will become second nature to you and you will remember all the difficulties you had before and grin. Not the "totally crazy need locking up" grin but rather a "man was I stupid" grin.

At first however; you're just going to have to go out on the limb we Christians call faith and ask away and wait for an answer as you keep seeking. Don't just ask and then sit down and say "well I asked Him this but no answer, so I'm going to wait here until He does answer me". Seekers seek even while they are waiting for answers. So again are you a seeker or a poser?

Waiting, standing still for an answer because most of the time we are too silly to hear his answer, is a great excuse to bail on the whole God thing. Seriously, if you want truth your going have to stick it out on faith at some point and see where the cards lay.

I trust God to help you with that and I'm going to speak a blessing (good stuff in Christian talk) on you too, it always helps when you have folks speaking blessings on you and praying for you. So I speak wisdom and answers to you in Jesus name – say "Amen" or "I agree" or "ok" or run away (not say run away but rather run away) – Now in addition to talking with God all the time you have another source of information.

According to my faith God gave us a guide book it's called the bible. Yes, it's a collection of books put together by a council after they had – funny enough- prayed to God for guidance as to what specific books and what order they should be in. In fact God says in this collection that He inspired and gave every word so we could learn of Him in the absolute truth in it.

In most bibles there is what is called the "Old Testament" by Christians that are sourced from the Jewish texts or better stated Hebrew texts. See the Hebrews kept pretty good verbal and written info on their God ever since He showed himself to them. As it turns out Christianity shares the same God. Some call Him God the Father. It's a cool title for "dude in charge".

Now other philosophies don't embrace the same God as the Jewish and Christian folk do, further the Jewish and Christian folks differ in faith about what the Christians call the New Testament. This is significant but I trust God to work that bit out with you since you are here on a Christian site technically seeking the Christian faith. This really isn't all that important initially while you are seeking God because the God of the Jewish faith is the Father of the Christian faith. There is going to be plenty of time to argue after you think you have it all figured out unless of course you decide to just love folks like God wants us to do.

Remember, it's the personal relationship thing you're after.

Islam for instance isn't even remotely close to the God of Christianity and Jewish faith despite claiming to be so. So contrary to what some folks say "It isn't all good". Stay focused on your basics – Talk to God and listen to his answers.

I have read many other philosophies and positions on the existence/non-existence of God and who He is and what name He has and to be honest none of them really made much sense until I started actually hanging out with God and talking to Him. Once I decided to start to talk with God and spend time with God instantly the whole non-existence camp failed epic and then many of the other documents claiming to know God and the other philosophies that claimed to know God were well, junk. Many things made them junk; some of them decided that god was us. Frankly, if you and I are God tell me, would we work for a living? Seriously. . .? Some of them decided He was basically a hammer that would crush you if you moved wrong. At one point I went with that one and I reasoned if God was that kind of God I might as well live it up while I could before He crushed me. Well that left me as empty as I was when I first started seeking and I knew that wasn't the answer, too many hangovers.

Then I embraced that whole benevolent alien thingy – it was easy, I could say He was a good ET and not worry about it anymore. That's basically what I did. Finally, I just stopped seeking at all. I had been playing with seeking but not serious. I hope you aren't like I was in that and that you are really seekers. It will make your life a ton easier after a few.

Then I had a unscheduled, God decided it was time, "come to Jesus moment". Now for me it was what I needed. For you it could be way different. As it turned out when I was hollering at God before He noticed me and decided to make His answer loud enough that even a person as stubborn as I could hear. Remember your meet God thingy is up to you and God. Remember that I said you have as much of Him as you desire and nothing more. After my "come to Jesus moment" I got introduced to the bible.

I asked God, who I knew was real because we talked a lot; what about this book? He said in essence, check it out. So here was my chance to hold God's feet to the fire and see if that bible was really from God or just some collection of junk made by man to control the ignorant, fluffy, masses.

I grabbed a legal pad of paper and made a list of every question I ever had about God, stuff like what is God, how did He make the earth, what was the beginning, did we evolve, how in the heck could two people populate the earth, what do you mean you rose again from the dead? What was all this stuff about Red sea parting and general stuff like that.

See after talking to God I knew He was real. What I needed to be proven to me was if the bible was God's book or just another nice story. As it turns out, I had to apologize to God about the whole "bible is junk" thing. By the way, I didn't use the word junk originally - insert your favorite expletive.

Why did I cover all that ground with you just now?

So I could give you a taste of what a seeker does. A seeker doesn't rest on opinions of men and a seeker doesn't accept popular foo fah. A seeker makes it personal and invests her or himself into the search. So are you still a seeker?

So I guess you have a few questions to ask yourself at this point. You don't need me to tell you what they are.

I'm going to change perspective on you a little and start looking at Christianity, let's walk it together you and I. I'm going to share some stuff. I'm not sure why God has decided this is the way it should go but I have learned that I need to listen.

I know, I walk around everyday seeing things in this world just fall apart, I see people crying that shouldn't have to cry and people hungry that should have things to eat and I ask God Why? God simply says "because you aren't doing what I asked".

What kind of answer is that I say biting into my $4 hamburger with a $1.50 Coke? What kind of answer is that, I say as I reach for one of my children or hug my wife? What kind of answer is that God, what kind of answer is that?

Then it dawns on me Christians, what God said is the right answer. In truth, if we did what He asked there would be much less hungry in fact so few that we would be able to find them in a moment, much less folks crying for no reason because we would do what He asked and reach for them like He reached for us when we became Christians. We Christians are a strange bunch we march around the world claiming to have truth but most of the time the truth is nowhere to be seen in our actions.

Yet there are many Christian people who follow God as He intended they should and you can always see the effect they have on their area as they walk after the Father, things change, hope arrives, people see the goodness of our mighty God.

Let me stand outside the church for a while and just tell you what I see and those of you who are seekers, you tell me if you agree. I see a people that have so many banners that one couldn't name them all, there are the big banners, like Catholic, Baptist, Assembly of God, Church of God, Church of Christ on and on and on.

Click here to see this document's Web Location in your browser

So I figured there must be something to this – maybe God is really a bunch of gods that have to have their own special altars and places of sacrifice. Turned out I was wrong. There is only one God so that left me with the question? Why so many Christian – operative word, Christian – churches.

Well imagine my surprise when I discovered they all say they follow Jesus, so I figured it must be some kind of tribal thing, maybe each tribe of Christians like other tribal systems had their own thing going and just happened to use the same name for their leader.

Well in short order I started to notice that maybe I was right. So I took a look in the bible and tried to find out where God was tribal. Well in the Old Testament He had the Tribes of Judah and Tribes of Israel but when I studied them, as it turns out they held the same Main Temple and all of the satellite temples taught of it. That Main Temple was in one place, not like today where we have thousands of churches spread all over God's half acre. I also noted they followed the same elements of God's word and thought cool... So I decided that tribal isn't what Christian churches are because they didn't seem to have any specific identity with regard to what God or what physical place they said their church was. So I went back to the bible and asked God for some light on the subject. After all He promises wisdom if I ask – so man, I asked.

I discovered in the Word of God that Christians are supposed to believe the Temple of God is in them and that they are both the church and the body of Jesus Christ. Cool . . . I thought, so I should be able to go to any of them and meet Jesus and then just wander around all of them meeting people and sharing God the same way in every one of them. Well that was silly of me. Apparently God isn't the same to all members of his Christian church. I have to admit I was perplexed.

Ok, which church had it right? Now that was the sixty five dollar question. So I returned to talk to God more and read his Word more and asked Him. His answer puzzled me at first but later on I understood. He said "the ones who remember me and love me". I said "well Lord doesn't all these churches and banners love you?" As it turned out His Word in the bible answered my question clearly.

God's Word says some of his folks worship Him with their mouths but not with themselves. I said ok which ones? Suddenly, He astounded me and took me on a tour of churches that according to his leading actually remember Him and loved Him as He required. What was funny was that they all flew a bunch of different banners. It wasn't like He said become a Church of God or a Baptist or a Catholic or Methodist but rather He pointed out to me across the spectrum of churches that were in place the ones that He said followed Him and remembered Him in truth. It was quite a sample. Now I'm not as thick as I look and I figured out that the banner really doesn't matter as long as it's a Christian church.

There are many churches that are not Christian that claim it but they are so obvious that it takes seconds listening to someone talk about what they believe you can just go – umm yeah ok, alrighty then, I see Jesus has left the building.

The reason you can do that is because you take what they claim to believe and compare it to the word of God. If they agree with the word of God then it's simple stuff. If they don't, it jumps at you. I mean there are even churches that call themselves Christians that change the whole word of God around to meet their philosophies. Pretty funny really, except for all the people that get hurt from the dead stuff they create.

So I took Jesus' lead and visited some of these churches that He said followed Him. Interesting enough many were different in style of worship; style of preaching, style of format, what clothes I could wear but they shared a common theme. Jesus Christ the only begotten son of God, Savior of the world, Lord of all who was crucified and rose again so we could be reconciled with God through Him. Now that's a pretty quick description of a much deeper topic. Sorry for all you detail freaks, email me and we can get deeper if you like.

Something else I noticed about these churches is they were all imperfect but all striving to be closer to the dude that introduced me to them- Jesus; it was a common theme. All of them had folks who could care less, all of them had folks that were eager to do God stuff. All of them had good people in management. Pastors/Priests shared a common love and adoration of God and the one who showed me their church, Jesus The High Priest.

I also noted they loved the people who didn't have a clue about Jesus yet too. They didn't crush new folk. They didn't stomp out the lights of anyone that had a question, that I could tell they thought was really silly. Not one of these churches that God showed me had a 400LB Christian gorilla that would stomp the snot out of some poor unsuspecting imperfect visitor.

All of them I noted, fed the poor folk and cared for each other inside the church as well. They prayed for one another and for the community and they sought Jesus to guide them on where they needed to move next. They were abuzz with activity.

Now some had their strengths in different facets of Christian faith than others. I began to note, that specific banners would have strength in a certain thing God wanted of his children. Stuff like; Charity, teaching, love, Holy Spirit each one had its weak and its strong areas but Jesus didn't seem to mind where they were weak because they were moving and caring and loving and following Jesus as close as they knew how.

I read later in the bible where Jesus often said "according to your faith . . ." or "your faith has made it so . . ." or "believe and it will be so . . ." every one of these banners had a desire to stay as close to Jesus as they knew how. It was pretty cool.

I started to speak to the leaders and teachers of these different banners and noted many similarities – Jesus as sole Lord, the power of prayer, the power of fellowship, the power of God, the power of the Holy Spirit. In fact many of you crusty olé Christians reading this may come to be shocked about some of these banners, which you hold are supposed to be dead in one or another of these areas and I found them not to be.

I asked a specific list of questions, ones that were important to me and my relationship with God. After all I was and still am a seeker. I was amazed at the consistency of answers. It dawned on me that it must not be the banner on the rooftop but rather the people in the building and the God they chose to follow. That's when I became an anywhere Christian.

I still had to note that some folks wanted you dressed up fancy and some didn't care and some wanted you to be perfectly quiet and others just let it all hang out like David did in the bible. Some were very systematic about how they held the service others were sprawling and changing. Every one of them never failed to tell me Jesus was alone Lord.

Jesus Loved me. Jesus gave his life for me. Jesus was the truth and the only way to the Father. In fact one banner, I had heard didn't believe that, shocked me when I heard it spoke out of the mouth of someone under that banner. Suddenly, I didn't care what folks called themselves and made sure I stayed close to the ones who Jesus said were following Him as He desired them to be.

What does this have to do with helping the crying and the hungry and the people who don't yet know Jesus. Everything, these places all different except in Jesus were working together pooling resources standing side by side, having meetings to see how they could better care for each other and the community. It blessed me so much that I almost couldn't stand it. And then God showed me the other side and it hurt my heart so badly I avoided even the good ones for a time while me and God got to work on me and my heart.

God gave me a list of questions, very simple. He instructed me that all I was to do is ask the leaders of a place these questions and not to weight the answers or concern myself with fixing what I was learning was broke with some of the places that claim they know God. The hardest part was his instruction for me to love them. I was told by God not to assume his emotions but just to be the messenger of these questions. It took me a while to understand what He meant by those instructions and it took me a while to get my stuff straight before I went to do this. The questions were easy. To the churches:

1. How many square feet of air conditioned floor space do I have to give you before you let my homeless children rest in you?
2. How much stereo and equipment do I have to give you before you could care more for the one that would steal it than the equipment itself?
3. How much food do I have to give you before you stop making man come before you for approval before you give them what I have given you freely?
4. How many people do I have to send to you before your doors are open all the time to minister to my children?
5. How much do I have to bless you before you trust me enough to leave my doors open and unlocked?
6. How big a parking lot do you need before you worship me in front of the world instead of inside your cave?

Well needless to say those are pretty simple questions. Also needless to say it made me real popular among the local banners. - Not.

I have to admit the places Jesus had shown me originally, acknowledged their shortcomings and took action and it was across all banners and sizes of congregations not just specific ones. I know that, not because they confessed to me or anything but because they changed – Just like that.

Keep in mind all I did was ask the questions. Well, suddenly more folks were getting fed more folks were crying with someone to hold them and more of the folks seeking had places to seek even after dark. Not because of me but because God had asked a few questions.

Some of them were pretty hard headed or as God called them stiff-necked. I was invited never to return to quite a few and what was funny they were across a large section of banners not one specific banner. God was making a point to me and I was starting to get it.

Well then came the next thing He had me do – it was mid day and God said to me on your way home stop and see how many of my churches have their doors open so the lost can come and talk with me. I argued of course and said “God the church isn’t the only place they can talk with you”. He told me that to the lost sometimes that was the only place they knew they could talk to Him. I asked Him to define open. He informed me that He meant the place or area of worship – some call it the sanctuary, should be open and free that I shouldn’t have to come before the face of man to get there, I said ok Lord.

It was a long, hard, disappointing ride home. I found exactly one church open, I went in and began to pray. They saw me come in and when they felt comfortable I was at a stopping point in my quiet prayer they greeted me and welcomed me and I explained what I was doing. As a result of my explanation they looked at me kind of crooked a bit uncertain of my explanation because they were a more subdued folk in their style of worship but nevertheless they allowed me a place to pray in the sanctuary. One, one house of God was open. It broke my heart but God didn’t ask me to do anything about it except to tell the open church’s Pastor about what God had me do and that He was pleased to see this place of worship open. Later, He had me write a letter to the other churches. It was a loving letter and many changed the way they operated. Still my heart was troubled.

Then one day He pointed me back to one of the small ministries that was doing His work downtown with the homeless. They fed and preached every night. I was so excited because I love that kind of ministry personally. I was homeless for a long time in my youth, by myself with no one, so I enjoy what God allows me to do in that type of ministry. I came to know the Pastor of this ministry and as it turned out he was struggling to make ends meet. My wife and I did what we could and then God asked me – Go ask the other ministries down the street here and then elsewhere if they are able to help and if they would come to the aid of this little blessing downtown.

That little ministry failed. Not because God hated it but because so called Christians hated it.

So seekers if you feel beat up by some of the people you meet that call themselves Christians don’t feel alone, so called Christians are cannibals as well.

They hated the smallness of the work, they held in disdain the people they fed, they disliked the doctrine the church preached, accusing it of being too simplistic, they hated the people who worked there because they didn’t wear fancy clothes. They hated the place because it was close to theirs.

I watched in a moment of learning as ministries poured money into a non Christian place that was doing the same work right across the street from this little ministry noting the fact this place never mentioned Jesus one time during their work. Never gave God glory one time for his provision. Yet the churches that let another ministry of God fail supported them instead.

They used excuses like well God will support his work and well I guess God didn’t bless it. Hypocrites, millstones for all of them. Watch for them and keep their hands out of your pockets.

One church answered the call to help and did all they could – people, effort, resources. In the meantime in those churches up the road, people are dying in those churches because they are asleep and they blame God. Stay away from these vipers. Follow Jesus, pray for them vipers but follow Jesus and if the place you call church home gets funky you talk to your elders and see what they say and then talk to your Pastor, I don't care how big a church it is and see what his heart is. If it stays funky and you aren't satisfied have peace and understand Jesus is your covering, your head, your safe place not that dead dry boned place.

Remember talk to God, be honest ask Him what He feels and thinks and read his word and then trust Him. And move on.

Now after that you might say I would have some right to be sour on Christianity. No way, because I know Jesus wasn't in any of those places that didn't do as God desired. See you can't use some scumbag's issues to keep you off Christianity, it's an excuse, a justification and it holds zero truth. It's a great rationalization if you're not really interested in seeking, allowing you to stop. So if that's what you're about, so be it. Remember, God is drawing you to Jesus and all you need do is seek.

See, you will learn quickly not to look for God in men. Men can hurt you and lie to you and do some really junky stuff to you. However; God remains true. Take every nasty thing any so called Christian has hurt you with and see if his book the Bible has instructed him to do it. Don't let him twist the words in his or her arrogance appointing themselves god to justify it but rather ask Jesus – remember we are already talking to Him seeker – and then read the bible. Very soon you will learn that some folks are just messed up. Then you can pray for them and ask Jesus to get you connected with those of a like heart to yours, you know, seekers.

You may have to just hang out with Jesus and his Word for a while learning more of Him, talking with Him, stuff like that. Eventually, God will provide you with some fellowship, remember you are not the same as they are so some stuff is going to read different to you than to them, Love them enough to talk about it and if you can't seem to come to perfect agreement on anything but Jesus Christ being your Lord master and savior – stay there. It's a safe place. The rest will get worked out by the Holy Spirit to bless both of you.

Finally – Remember it's between you and your God what gets done and how much He is in your life. He wants all of you, what you give up may be less. It's on you. God does complete works, not partial subcontracting.

Fundamentals – Absolute Honesty – Absolute Trust – Absolute Rest – talk with your God; don't let men who act like idiots take Him away from you. Love those folks – pray for them, they are dying and don't even know it because they think it's all good. God will use your new fire and it will rub off on folks as you seek. Never forsake that first Love – Seeking the face of God.
